Dear Daron:

With a lot of the western United States in a drought, we find East Carbon City trying to conserve every drop of water possible. We are also looking for other water sources. East Carbon City has been under some form of water restrictions since our outside watering season began in 2015. The city has provided other sources of water for those willing to haul it.

The Grassy Trail Creek is an important part of East Carbon's water system. I feel that the integrity of the creek has been compromised by underground mining around and under it. Water goes underground somewhere around the rodeo grounds, up Whitmore Canyon and, does not return to the surface for us to use in our community.

Your prompt attention to my concern will be appreciated. Feel free to call me any time.

Sincerely,

David Avery
